Preparation and Techniques to Avoid Meeting Chaos

Daniel Foth, JD, Local Government Specialist, Local Government Center, UW-Madison, Division of Extension

December’s article reviewed the importance of establishing meeting rules and the chair’s (mayor/village president) role to “preside” over a council/board (the body) meeting. This month the focus is on how a chair can use a two-step process to effectively “preside” over a meeting. Step One is pre-meeting preparation and Step Two is practical steps to deal with common meeting issues.

Step One - Pre-meeting Preparation

Before each meeting, a chair should understand each agenda item. S/he might also consider how body members may address an issue and interact with the other body members (and staff), thus influencing the body’s meeting discussions.

Pre-meeting preparation can help the chair anticipate how each member might react to various agenda items. One technique a chair can use for pre-meeting preparation is the Topic, Outcome, Process (TOP)\(^1\) approach. TOP was initially developed for use by facilitators. A facilitator creates safe environments where people can identify and solve problems, plan together, make collaborative decisions, resolve their own conflicts, and self-manage as responsible adults. In attending facilitation training, I was struck by how similar the chair’s role is to that of a facilitator. I see TOP as a useful tool to assist a chair in thinking about the meeting and considering how members may react to each agenda item. The table (above) is for the chair’s use only, strictly as her/his tool to keep the meeting on time and track. Illustrated above is an example of how to use the TOP tool. A chair may adapt this tool as best fits her/his needs.

Step 2 - Practical Steps to Deal with Common Meeting Issues

This month, we will cover two of the common meeting rules and decorum issues that typically occur.

Member(s) Do Not Understand the Meeting and Decorum Rules

The chair should see that each member (especially new members) has a copy of the body’s meeting and decorum rules (rules) and has read the rules to know their role. This approach should help the chair maintain order by reminding the member(s) about the body’s rules. For the first meeting of the body, a chair may wish to review these rules to begin the first meeting when there are newly elected officials. Similarly, a chair can use this approach before a discussion of a potentially contentious item. Doing so...
